THE CEMETERIES AT PELHAM, MASS.

The Old Cemetery at the Center lies directly behind the old church and the town hall. The few gravestones remaining sre, for the most part, badly weathered and partly effaced, consequently very hard to decipher. In some cases the headstone is completely gone, but the footstone is still legible.

The reading and copying of these fifty-nine stones occupied two persons for three hours. Various means and devices were used to get every possible letter, the workers collaborating on questionable items.

The other cemetery listed here lies in the southern end of Pelham, only a few feet from the Belchertown line.

THE CHURCH AT TILHAM, MAINE.

The old cemetery at the corner lies directly behind the old church and the town hall. The low gravestones remaining are for the most part, badly weathered and partly effaced, consequently very hard to decipher. In some cases the headstone is completely gone, but the footstone is still legible.

The reading and copying of these fifty-nine stones occupied two persons for three hours. Various means and devices were used to get every possible letter, the workers collaborating on questionable items. The other cemetery listed here lies in the southern end of Belham, only a few feet from the Belcherstown line.
